Basic Threat Models: Attackers A series of attacks are typically performed by a single attacker, such as an intruder, or "hacktivist," who wishes to harass or damage a particular system, company, or organization. Such attacks may be passive (i.e., no human interaction is required), inactive, or real-time. In an attack scenario, the attacker attempts to breach security for the purpose of extracting sensitive information and/or damaging or destroying the target network. An attacker's main goal is to obtain the information he or she can use to plan for future attacks or to cause damage to a target.
