For the past two years, students in high school have had to learn what some would consider to be a serious academic ethics lesson. These were the expectations of students from around the country. For many, that lesson was taught during a workshop in ethics, but not at the school where they live. For many, it was a subject that had to be covered by the American Psychological Association (APA) and the National Science Teachers Association (NSTA). But for others, like me, this lesson has to be taught at home. In a nutshell, that lesson is ethics, the use of the internet and the protection of children's online privacy. That lesson was taught at the annual meeting of the American Psychological Association. The purpose of that meeting is to discuss and teach ethics. Not just ethics for students, but also, ethics for psychologists in the professional field. Ethics means what is right or wrong. The conference held at the end of the week was the culmination of a series of workshops on the topic of ethics for psychologists. The Ethics Standards Board (ESB) has developed guidelines for psychologists. These are for guiding us in our professional practice. The ESB has developed guidelines for psychologists on matters such as confidentiality, informed consent, and research. You have to remember, that these are guidelines. The psychologists can certainly use them and they can't use them all.

These guidelines can also be used by other professionals as well. I hope you will remember your guidelines as you grow as a psychologist. I also hope that all of you will be careful about how you use the internet and any other technology as a psychologist. I am a proud psychologist and a member of the National Association of Psychology and Law. I hope you will remember this ethics when you grow as a psychologist, when you teach ethics, and when you practice in the field. American Psychological Association, 2012

---
