Resizing with the Ruler The simplest way to resize an image is to drag a window or a box around the area of the image that you want to resize. You can also use the ruler to resize a canvas. To make this work, draw a box or a window around the area you want to resize. In Photoshop, you can select the ruler (you see a blue diamond with lines down the left side of the Ruler option). Click the divider line of the ruler and drag it to resize the image. You can also resize the canvas manually with this tool. To resize an image in your canvas, select the image and click the Resize button (see Figure 8-5) on the tool bar. FIGURE 8-5 If you make a mistake while resizing your image, press Ctrl+Z to undo your change. You can also use the Undo button on the tool bar if you make a mistake. A useful shortcut to resize images is to hold down the Shift key while you drag the window. This moves the entire image in proportion to the change in size. In addition to sizing images, you can also resize groups of images in a layer, which is covered in the "Editing with Layers" section, later in this chapter.

Q: How to debug PHP fatal error with apache I have a apache web server running PHP 5.2.17 on a Linux box. I'm running wordpress from localhost and if I kill the PHP script (either manually or with ctrl+c, the site runs fine. I've been unable to get the PHP script to run without it shutting down. I read that I should debug with apache_log_level but I don't know what apache_log_level to set it at, and that doesn't seem to be working. Any advice would be great! Update: I turned off the standard error logs and used lsof to find out what was causing my script to die. The process that was eating up all the memory was my browser which seemed weird. Still no luck getting my php script to run again.
